Understanding Autism Training

- I have a story (I always have a story)
- Why the why
- What are goal is not
- 'Learn to learn'
- Tools for life

Why Incredible Beginnings?

It's better to prepare than repair

“When they go high we go low!”

- Building relationships
  - Supporting separations
  - Child led play (entering child's spotlight)
  - Partnering with parents
- Proactive strategies
  - Rules, routines, schedules
  - Transitions
  - Physical environment
  - Giving commands
- Addressing “misbehavior”
- Providing support during meltdowns
- Building support plans
- Finding your calm

Putting on your autism goggles to see the WHY

“Put on your autism glasses and be responsive”

ALL
DONE

Building tools for life:
Not just “classroom behavior
management”

Schedules

- Provides a sense of predictability
- “Helps me feel calm and relaxed”
- Can promote flexibility
- Fosters independence/self-monitoring

Visuals

- Gives ASD children a voice
- Promotes understanding and interactions

Social stories

- Allows them to know and follow the routine
- Prepares so you don't have to repair
- Helps children know expectations
- Teaches the skill of accessing information

Why a Parent Navigator?

Why not a parent navigator?

Parents need teachers

Teachers need parents

Provide parents' perspective

Provide child's perspective

Autism is a team sport: We need partners

Use of Strategies

“Helping to minimize the struggles our children are having and being about to best support them and their parents”

“Builds a team for the children to help them be understood, supported, and successful”

“Supporting students in becoming more independent at self regulation. Finding the way to connect with each individual child”

“Opening my eyes and using my autism goggles! Remembering that a behavior or a meltdown is caused by something they are trying to communicate or something they need from us”

THANK YOU
